Laying Hens Need Meat

The Poultry Husbandry department of the University of Nebraska College of agriculture recommends that laying hens be fed meat feeds of some kind. The hen is a meat eater. She is willing to produce on a "wheatless" ration but refuses to lay well on a "meatless" diet, says "War-time Poultry Feeding," an emergency bulletin of the Extension Service of the University. Rabbit meat, either raw or cooked, fed at the rate of one ounce per hen a day, is said to give good results. Hens eat cooked better than raw meat.

War Over; Go to School

Boys who expected to go to war are now going to school, according to letters reaching the School of Agriculture, the secondary school of the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture. This school is open to all who have an eighth grade education. Special emphasis is placed on automobile and tractor work for boys, and many subjects are given in stock raising and general agriculture. Military training is given boys, although students in this school are not members of the S. A. T. C. Three hundred boys and girls are now enrolled in the School of Agriculture. Registration is being kept open for those who expected to go to war but who now wish to go to school.

Sell Only Matured Chickens

The poultry and eggs section of the United States Food Administration is strongly urging farmers to sell only reasonably matured chickens, allowing the partly grown ones to increase in weight. It is especially urged that all vigorous hens and pullets be reserved for layers.

Gentlemen:—I have just received through your local agent, Mr. Carl Andersen, a check for $31.40, covering a partial loss sustained by me to my Dodge car by theft, while it was left for a few minutes at Crystal Lake, and must say that the adjustment is entirely satisfactory.

While the loss was small, and only on some equipment, I am pleased to say that I am satisfied that larger losses would be given the same careful consideration. And in the future I will not hesitate to recommend your good company to any one whom I may come in contact with, desiring automobile insurance.

How Does a Soldier Feel in a Life-and-Death Crisis?

He was caught—like a rat in a trap—with only one chance in a million of coming out alive. He thought of—
 What does a soldier think of in a life-and-death crisis? How does he feel? What does he do? What is the millionth chance that he takes to escape? While trembling and hot from the experiences they have gone through, over two hundred men—airmen, trench raiders, submarine commanders, grenade throwers—have told what they saw, heard and felt. To read these stories of personal adventure is to get an entirely new viewpoint of the war.

A Close-Up of the War

Newspapers and magazines treat the war along broad, general lines—they speak of nations and armies. But these stories tell you about the most daring, audacious and heroic deeds of MEN—individuals. They tell of exploits which even now the history of literature could tell such stories, for no man's imagination could think them up. Yet each of these stories is true—and so startling that the mind simply stands agape at wonder. They would thrill a man with blood as cold as a fish.

"True Adventures of the Great War"

6 Volumes Free!

The Review of Reviews has collected these two hundred and more stories in six handsome volumes, containing altogether 1,800 pages, profusely illustrated. Every one of these stories is absolutely genuine as to the facts related; every one of them is told in the words of the person who is the hero or heroine of the exploit. And now, for a limited time, you can secure these six volumes free, with a two-year subscription to the Review of Reviews.

Now, and during these next few years, as never before, every intelligent American will need the Review of Reviews. The world is on the verge, it is in the throes of social, industrial and political changes that are cataclysmic. One cannot form opinions on these revolutionary events, one cannot base his acts intelligently upon them—one cannot understand the real war situation, unless the facts, all the facts, are known. It is genuine patriotic duty in these coming days of trial to know every citizen to know comprehensively what is happening in the world around him.

Send No Money

The subscription to Review of Reviews is offered at the regular price. The six volumes described above will be given in addition, absolutely free. So that no one may get in the dark, the books will be sent first for examination, all charges prepaid, and if they do not come up to expectation, they may be returned within five days, and the subscription cancelled. Only the first edition of this set will be offered free with a two-year subscription. Immediate completion of this offer is, therefore, advised. If you are at all interested, mail the coupon now.
